Active Data Guard extends Oracle Data Guard capabilities by providing read/write functionality on the standby or Disaster Recovery system.

After enabling Data Guard, you cannot edit your configuration to change between synchronous or asynchronous transport of data to the DR site.

You should use similar configurations for your primary and standby databases to ensure you meet the same performance service level after a role transition.

You must configure Data Guard manually to create the standby or DR instance for your primary Exadata Database.

You can enable Data Guard to support your standby or Disaster Recovery (DR) needs with a single API call or mouse click in the UI using cloud
